Tropical Formation May Pose a Threat to Portions of the Region Next Week; Uncertainty Remains

The National Weather Service (NWS) Guam Weather Forecast Office is monitoring the potential for a tropical circulation to form in the next few days somewhere in eastern Micronesia. NWS Guam notes that latest model data suggests this potential circulation could pass near or south of the Marianas in the May 3-6 timeframe.

High uncertainty remains regarding the development of this potential system, its track, and timing, which are all subject to change. NWS forecasters continue to monitor satellite data across the region for the eventual emergence of a circulation later this week. This forecast will be closely monitored and may be updated as it becomes clearer how the circulation will develop in eastern Micronesia.

At this early time, the community is advised to stay up to date with the latest information.
